17 Unpublished Gershwin Songs To Be Made Public By Brother; At Least 50 Exist In Secret Notebooks From 1920

Seventeen unpublished compositions by George Gershwin, who died in 1937, are to be made public by his brother, Ira, who wrote the lyrics for most of his songs for Broadway and Hollywood.

Fourteen of the pieces have been sent to George Balanchine by André Kostelanetz, the conductor, with the permission of the composer's brother. The other three will be used in a film, says the New York Times. Mr. Kostelanetz has asked the famous choreographer who is the creative force behind the New York City Ballet to consider this music for the creation of a ballet.

In addition, the three other pieces are planned for a new movie to be made by Billy Wilder. The lyrics have just been written by Ira Gershwin. The picture, to be called "Kiss Me, Stupid," was written by Mr. Wilder and his collaborator, I. A. L. Diamond. The songs will be done by two of the stars, Dean Martin and Peter Sellers.

Perhaps more important than the Gershwin music that is now being made available is the fact that there is a much larger storehouse of Gershwin compositions in the composer's notebooks, which date back to 1920. The music for Mr. Balanchine and Mr. Wilder came from these notebooks.

Until now, only Ira Gershwin and a few close friends of the writer and his brother have been aware of the contents of these notebooks. Mr. Gershwin estimated that the notebooks contained at least fifty completed tunes. The lyricist is well known for his tendency to under-estimate.

However, after being prodded by his secretary, Lawrence D. Stewart, co-author, with Ed Jablonski, of "The Gershwin Years," he conceded that there might be twice as many. "But some of these," he said, "are not complete."

When asked why he had not tried to put lyrics to these tunes until now, Mr. Gershwin at first said no one had asked him to. This, Mr. Stewart said, was not true, says the New York Times. Then Mr. Gershwin declared:

"I have never written lyrics for a song just to have it published as a popular song. There was always a book in mind — either a show or a movie. Sometimes the song was never used in the show or movie for which it was originally intended and it turned up in different form, possibly, in another show or picture. Sometimes these songs were never used."

There was still another reason, he admitted, after prompting by Mr. Stewart, why he had stopped writing lyrics. "I have always worked on lyrics and on projects that held intellectual excitement. The projects that were suggested to me in recent years seemed to lack the intellectual excitement."

Not since 1946 has a Gershwin song, with lyrics by his brother, been made public. At that time, nine songs were done for the movie, "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," starring Betty Grable.

The songs for that movie were done in an unusual fashion. Ira Gershwin hummed his brother's tunes to Kay Swift, a songwriter and friend of the Gershwins. He then wrote them on music sheets. Then Ira Gershwin did the lyrics.

The story of the secret pile of Gershwin music and the compositions that are to be made public emerged after interviews with Mr. Wilder, Mr. Diamond, Mr. Gershwin, Mr. Stewart, and Mrs. Leonore Gershwin, the wife of the lyricist, who played a brief but important role in the decision to let the public hear the Gershwin music that had been confined to notebooks.

It all began with two social gatherings. The first, about two months ago, was the visit of Mr. Kostelanetz to the Gershwin home in Beverly Hills, says the New York Times. Inevitably, the conversation turned to music. Ira, in answer to a remark by Mr. Kostelanetz, alluded to his brother's notebooks upstairs.

Mr. Kostelanetz asked permission to look at them. As he read the music he became excited. He pleaded with Mr. Gershwin to permit the music to be played publicly.

Mr. Gershwin was reluctant until Mr. Kostelanetz spoke of a possible ballet by Mr. Balanchine. Mr. Gershwin, who is a great admirer of Mr. Balanchine agreed.

Since then the compositions have been copied and sent to Mr. Balanchine. Mr. Gershwin says he thinks the choreographer, who is a highly respected musicologist, was in Europe at the time.

Among the ballets done by the New York City Ballet with music in the American idiom are: "The Guests," (Marc Blitzstein); "Age of Anxiety," (Leonard Bernstein); "The Pied Piper," (Aaron Copland); "Cakewalk" (Louis Moreau Gottschalk, arranged and orchestrated by Hershy Kay); "Bayou," (Virgil Thomson); and "Stars and Stripes" (John Philip Sousa and Hershy Kay).

More unusual was the manner in which Ira Gershwin was persuaded to make available songs for the new movie and to write lyrics.

This began on February 5, at the 21st wedding anniversary of the William Wylers, in their home in Hollywood, Cal. Billy Wilder was seated next to Mrs. Gershwin. He and Mr. Diamond had long discussed the need for songs for the new movie and realized that this non-musical film, says the New York Times, would need the most expert kind of lyrics that fit plot and characterization.

Mr. Wilder said to Mrs. Gershwin during the party: "Lee, what does it take to get Ira to go back to work?" She replied: "To be asked by someone he likes."

She then agreed to broach the subject to her husband. Several nights later, Mr. Wilder, Mr. Diamond, and Irving Lazar, a well-known agent who represents Mr. Gershwin and who has dealt with Mr. Wilder, turned up at the Gershwin home.

They told him that if he did the lyrics he could select any composer he chose. The lyrics writer

U.S. INDUSTRIALIST, HEAD OF A.J.C., DIES; NEW COMMITTEE PRESIDENT IS YOUNG LAWYER OF WIDE EXPERIENCE

A. M. Sonnabend, the industrialist, died at Good Samaritan Hospital in Palm Beach, Florida, where he was on vacation. He was 67 years old. He was president of the American Jewish Committee, influential organization which is concerned with Jewish rights and security affairs all over the world.

Mr. Sonnabend, whose name was Abraham, was chairman of the Hotel Corporation of America, the Ward Baking Company and several other corporations, and a director of the Columbia Pictures Corporation; Botany Industries, Inc.; and numerous others.

Word of Mr. Sonnabend's death was received at his home in Chestnut Hill, Boston, Mass., but no details concerning the cause were immediately available, says the New York Times. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Esther Lewitt Sonnabend; three sons, Roger, Paul, and Steven; a brother, Leopold M. Sonnabend; a sister, Mrs. Lillian Goldinger, and twelve grandchildren. A funeral service was held at Temple Israel in Boston.

It was said of Mr. Sonnabend that he had a rare knack of mixing red and black ink on corporation ledgers and producing pure black.

The Sonnabend technique was to arrange "weddings" between thriving companies and others less prosperous. The more affluent partner in the union would receive a "dowry" from the other, in the form of a tax-loss carry-forward. Thus current and future income of the merged corporation would be, to some extent, tax-free.

The Boston-born financier revived some very sick companies by his methods. The Child's Company was a case in point. When Mr. Sonnabend became president of the restaurant chain in 1954 it had just lost $3 million and was faced with a further deficit of $2 million.

He merged it with several profitable properties, including the Plaza and Roosevelt Hotels in New York; the Somerset Hotel in Boston; the Cleveland in Cleveland; the Edgewater Beach in Chicago, and the Mayflower in Washington.

Advantage of Child's tax-loss carry-forward situation was taken in the financing of the merged company, which was named the Hotel Corporation of America, says the New York Times. The Corporation later branched out into motels and food products, and by 1957 could show $1 million in net profits.

When Mr. Sonnabend took over direction of the Botany Mills organization, it had a $16 million deficit. Twelve companies that made everything from sun tan lotion to luggage were added to its roster of subsidiaries. By 1957 Botany, renamed Botany Industries, Inc., had recorded sales of $96 million.

There were numerous other examples of Mr. Sonnabend's expertise at the resuscitation of companies through merger and diversification. Early this year seven directors representing him were elected to a controlling position in the Lionel Corporation, manufacturer of toy electric trains, which had its financial troubles. That move was temporarily blocked by a New York State Supreme Court ruling allowing the new board only day-to-day control.

In 1961 Mr. Sonnabend was elected chairman of the Seagrave Corporation, fire engine manufacturers with an annual sales range of up to $40 million. In recent years he also became a director of the Alleghany Corporation, says the New York Times, a major holding company with a controlling interest in the New York Central Railroad System and other important business concerns.

The new head of the American Jewish Committee to succeed Mr. Sonnabend is Morris B. Abram, a lawyer. Mr. Abram, who was the first legal chief of the Peace Corps, becomes the 13th president of the Committee, which was founded in 1906 to protect the civil and religious rights of Jews the world over. He is a native of Fitzgerald, Georgia, and practiced law in Atlanta until two years ago. He is now a member of the law firm of Paul Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton, and Garrison in New York.

Mr. Abram, who had served as chairman of the executive board of the American Jewish Committee, is currently the United States representative to the United Nations Subcommittee on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities.

In this position, he recently submitted a draft convention on the problem of racial and religious discrimination, and he has been active in drawing attention to anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union.

He has served as an attorney in crucial cases dealing with major civil rights and civil liberties issues and was the attorney in a 1962 case before the Federal District Court that struck down Georgia's county unit election system and its denial of voting rights to the people of the state's more populous counties.

Mr. Abram graduated from the University of Georgia and studied at the University of Chicago Law School. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and was named a Rhodes Scholar. He earned the Bachelor's, and the Master's degrees at Oxford University, in England.

During World War II, he served in the Army Air Force with the rank of Major and was awarded the Legion of Merit, says the New York Times. He was a member of the American prosecution staff at the Nuremburg trials of Nazi war criminals.

He lives with his wife and five children in Larchmont, N.Y.

Israel Plans To Expand Electric Power By Fifty Percent

Israel is beginning its largest expansion of electric power production. The power drive, a top priority undertaking, is aiming for a fifty per cent increase of present capacity. A main part of the expansion, construction of two new thermal generating units at Haifa, will begin in April and reach completion in 1967.

Although the program will take several years, it will be a race against time, according to Jacob Pelled, managing director of the Israel Electric Corporation, Ltd. Mr. Pelled was interviewed by the New York Times in New York during a visit to negotiate utilization of $28 million of United States Government financing for the Haifa power stations.

"Even if everything goes ahead as planned," he said, "it will be a tight schedule if we are to supply all of the demands. But we expect to keep up with the demands and also build up a larger reserve of capacity, which is now very low."

Present installed power capacity in Israel is about 645,000 kilowatts. Production and distribution facilities, all operated by Israel Electric, consist principally of six oil-powered thermal stations, two each at Haifa, Tel-Aviv and Ashdod.

This supply is now close to being outstripped by increasing demand, Mr. Pelled noted. The main increase has come with expansion of industry, but there have also been growing demands in power needs of new irrigation developments, he added.

"Growth has been much greater than expected," Mr. Pelled said, "including the needs for electric light as well as power. And we have been like the father with five

Was Founder-Director Of World's Foremost Research Center On Nazis

Dr. Alfred Wiener, founder and director of the Wiener Library, which is recognized as the world's foremost research and information center on Nazi Germany, died at his home in London, England. He was 78 years old.

Dr. Wiener, driven from his native Germany when it ceased to be the land of poets and thinkers that he loved, earned the thanks and respect of Germany's postwar leaders. In 1955 the Federal Government decorated him for his work against intolerance, says the New York Times, and in 1958 the late President Theodor Heuss visited the Library during his state visit to London.

The Library, on Devonshire Street, has as its terms of reference the documentation of racial and religious intolerance in all countries. It contains materials—books, pamphlets, leaflets, newspaper clippings—dealing with apartheid (segregation) in South Africa; the Spanish Civil War, Israel and the Middle East, Jewish emancipation, and anti-Semitism.

Dr. Wiener was born in Potsdam, a suburb of Berlin, and grew up in the Polish province of Poznan, then part of Germany and a once-thriving region of Jewish culture. He studied at the University of Heidelberg; his graduation thesis was on the history of Arab literature. In World War II he served in the German forces.

He recognized as early as 1918 the danger signals in Germany and published his first denunciation of the stirrings of a vicious nationalism. Later he became secretary of a German-Jewish anti-Nazi organization.

When Hitler assumed power, Dr. Wiener escaped to Amsterdam,

YESHIVA U. "ANSWER MAN" KNOWS EVERYTHING; ASK AND SEE

The key to achieving an educated society is having most of the questions that perplex people answered by authorities and researchers. Reading and studying alone cannot solve the problems that people experience in their everyday environment. They question a great many things. But, when they have questions concerning the Bible, Jewish History, the Old Testament, they somehow find their way to the desk of Dr. Sidney B. Hoenig, professor of Jewish History at Yeshiva University, America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices, in New York.

Dr. Hoenig is kidded by his fellow faculty members and associates about his being the "answer man" for he has been answering questions from many sources throughout the world since he joined Yeshiva University. Over the years, he has kept a log on the many queries he has received:

They range from queries on the Jewish holy days; observance of the memorial for the deceased on February 29 during a leap year; requirements for becoming a mohel (the rabbi who performs the circumcision on all Jewish, male newborns); the wearing of a "sheitl" (a wig, worn by extreme Orthodox Jewish women in compliance with ritual laws); new interpretations of the bible; whether or not a Jewish woman can become a godmother to a non-Jewish child; relationships of different religions in historic origin; continuity of the week and the Sabbath in relationship to the proposal of a reformed world calendar; Talmudic views stemming from Pharisaic-Sadducean controversies, their influence on synagogues, and even on origins of Christianity; and many others.

"The questions come from many geographic locales," Dr. Hoenig points out. They also are not just from Orthodox Jews who need clarification on certain items of Jewish law and writings, he says. National magazines, newspapers, television, and other media have approached the Yeshiva University "answer man" for aid and authoritative flavor for articles pertaining to the Old Testament.

He also has been asked to advise on the authenticity of the Dead Sea Scrolls which were uncovered in recent years, something which he hesitates to do as he questions the dating of the Scrolls.

Many of the questions Dr. Hoenig receives are answered from his own vast store of knowledge. He says that he receives close to fifty queries a month. However, many of the queries require him to do research "in the interest of absolute accuracy."

One of the queries was a question on why there are no women rabbis. Others revolve around interpretation of modern day activities to traditional Jewish learning. A number of months ago, he was asked to clarify certain aspects of the Sabbath Law, a controversy which governed business operations in New York City.

Dr. Hoenig enjoys setting the record straight, although it sometimes becomes a bit difficult and time-consuming. But he feels that, if a man is interested in the Bible and his religion and takes the time to search for an answer, the least that he can do is to satisfy the puzzlement. "I don't advertise for the questions, but they come in regularly nevertheless from many organizations and people," he said. Many Jewish groups refer questions to him as they are aware of his expertise on matters of Jewish history and folklore.

Dr. Sidney B. Hoenig is Professor of Jewish History at Yeshiva University and director of the Department of Adult Education (YUDAE), Community Service Division. A recognized authority in his field, he is a prolific writer and lecturer on Judaism. He was born in New York City; he received his B.S.S. degree from the College of the City of New York in 1927. In June, 1931, he was ordained by Yeshiva University's Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary, and in 1934, obtained his Ph.D. from Dropsie College, in Philadelphia, Pa. He joined the faculty of Yeshiva University the same year.

A resident of Queens, residing with his wife and children in Belle Harbor, Dr. Hoenig is the author of many publications, including books and articles, among which are "Guide to the Prophets", "Guide To Jewish History,"; "Guide To Jewish Observance," (YUDAE Guide Series); "The Great Sanhedrin"; "Sandia And His Life"; and "Jewish Family Purity." He is a frequent contributor to scholarly journals and his articles have appeared in the Jewish Quarterly Review, the Universal Jewish Encyclopedia, Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, the American Educator Encyclopedia, and the Encyclopedia Britannica.

In 1962, he served as the chairman of the Adult Education Committee at the World Conference on Education held in Jerusalem. Dr. Hoenig has served as educational director of the Young Israel Movement, and was principal of the Hebrew Teachers Training School for Girls. He is also Chaplain at the Brooklyn, N. Y., Navy Yard; and at the Brooklyn House of Detention.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not published by a congregation organization and which has the distinction of being a member of the Canadian Business Publications.

WAS FOUNDER-DIRECTOR OF WORLD'S FOREMOST RESEARCH CENTER

where he founded a library. He began by collecting material on the Jewish question and slowly extended the scope of his Library, says the New York Times. He moved with his collection to London in 1939 before the start of World War II.

The standard works of both Nazi and anti-Nazi propaganda, together with neutral accounts and newspapers, like the walls of the four-story Wiener Library. There are 15,000 eye-witness accounts of Nazi persecution, collected after the war from interviews with concentration camp survivors all over the world; copies of the obscene anti-Jewish magazine Der Stürmer; Nazi textbooks and copies of the crude and cruel Nazi songs.

In the photographic section are pictures of the Nazi leaders and the concentration camps. The library also keeps phonograph records of Hitler's speeches.

The Library provided material for the prosecution of the Nazi leaders at Nuremburg. It was afterward given all the material collected for the trial.

Recently Dr. Wiener's Library produced photographs of Dr. Josef Mengele, the infamous physician of the Auschwitz concentration camp, who is believed to be hiding in South America.

Distinguished historians use the Library, and every day there are foreign visitors. But it is not open to the public and to be a member of the center, one needs an introduction from a reputable person who is also an opponent of Fascism.

Although his whole institute was intended as an emphatic reminder of evil, Dr. Wiener was foremost among those who tried to heal the wounds. He frequently visited Germany and fostered goodwill, especially among the youth, says the New York Times. He leaves his wife and three married daughters.

People of the Book

The tide of Jewish history carries an overwhelming theme. In the face of every peril the love of learning in Jewish life flourished and survived

At first it encompassed the original wisdom of the Bible.

Later it added all knowledge, wherever it might be found. It earned for the Jewish people an honoured title, "People of the Book."

Ancient Jewish scholars recognized that knowledge could be man's greatest happiness. Their prayers asked God to "Inspire us to understand and to discern, to perceive . . ."

Modern man's need to understand, discern and perceive are greater than ever. Louis Brandeis, famous American lawyer and jurist put it best when he wrote, "Behind every argument is someone's ignorance."

Mazel Tov!

There is no happier greeting in the Jewish tradition. "Mazel Tov" means more than good luck. It means more than "Congratulations".

The name of this wine is "Mazel Tov" It interprets your good wishes brilliantly in the glass. It is a wine as happy in the glass as the wish it symbolizes.

For a new home, a move up the business ladder, a new member of the family—say: Mazel Tov! . . . give "Mazel Tov". It makes a warm and pleasant accompaniment to your warm and pleasant wish.

Although Mazel Tov is made strictly "Kosher l'Pesach" it is available all year 'round.

17 UNPUBLISHED GERSHWIN SONGS TO BE MADE PUBLIC BY BROTHER; AT LEAST 50 EXIST IN SECRET NOTEBOOKS FROM 1920

informed them that the composer would be his brother.

"These are hard people to resist," Mr. Gershwin recalled. "They are very persuasive."

At Mr. Gershwin's request, Roger Edens, associate producer of the movie version of "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," was brought in to play Gershwin music on the piano from the notebooks. Ira Gershwin does not play any musical instruments and does not read music. He has, however, a musical memory that astounds even professionals. It is considered flawless where his brother's music is concerned.

For two week-ends Mr. Edens played and replayed some twenty Gershwin tunes. From these were selected three melodies. Ira Gershwin settled down in the post-midnight hours, as is his custom, to write lyrics, reports the New York Times. He emerged with three songs called: "I'm A Poached Egg," "Sophia," and "All The Livelong Day." In addition, the already famous Gershwin song, "'S' Wonderful," will be used in the movie.

children, all of whom need new shoes at the same time, when the budget will only allow him to buy three pairs. We have had to do the best we could, but now we must do better."

Mr. Pelled said that electric power demand in Israel had risen on an average of twelve per cent a year during the period, 1958 to 1962. This rate, he noted, compared with a ten per cent rise in the value of national production during the same period.

In addition to the need for more power to maintain Israel's rate of economic development, larger supplies of electricity are needed for domestic use as living standards rise, says the New York Times. Increasing use of appliances, more air conditioning, and development of television — expected soon in Israel — all point to larger consumer demand for electricity, Mr. Pelled said.

"Israel also has great plans for expanding its program for desalination of sea water, on which a main pioneer plant at Eilat in the Negev now is nearing completion," he added. "The program will add to power demands."

The two new thermal plants at Haifa will each have generating capacity of 125,000 kilowatts. Boilers and generators for these are to be obtained from United States concerns.

The first, on which construction will start in April, is scheduled to be completed in June, 1966; the second, nine months later. Meanwhile, other smaller units in the Negev to be completed this year and next will add some 85,000 kilowatts of capacity.

By 1967, Mr. Pelled said, Israel will have added 335,000 kilowatts to present capacity of 645,000, bringing the nation's total generating capacity to 980,000 kilowatts, says the New York Times. This total, Mr. Pelled noted, would provide a reserve of some 200,000 kilowatts, which would be a much more comfortable margin than at present for new growth of demand.

THE AUSCHWITZ INVOLVEMENT WITH EVIL

The New York Times says:

It is too late for revenge; how can retribution be possible for bestial acts made more bestial because they were devised by reasoning humans? It is too late for horror; time can only numb the senses at the photograph of an anonymous, aging mother — or perhaps it was a grandmother — walking her toddling children into the gas chambers at Auschwitz. Their shoes, piled and saved, are still there — behind a glass case now — a grisly tombstone to the innocents.

Although an estimated four million men, women and children disappeared up the flues of Auschwitz, a shroud of smoke is still visible to people of conscience, almost two decades after the gates of horror were opened for all the world to see. Those gates still stand, capped by the ironic slogan under which every prisoner entered: Arbeit Macht Frei (Work Makes You Free).

Now, in the Frankfurt courtroom where a score of former members of the Auschwitz concentration camp staff are on trial, the West German Government is writing history. This is the biggest war crimes trial to be held under German auspices, carefully prepared and documented by and for Germans. Newspaper and radio coverage has been full. No longer can excuses be made for looking the other way. If most Germans did not know the existence of the concentration camps then, they know the details now.

A vital point is being emphasized in the trial of these defendants. It is this: the machinery of mass extermination was manned not merely by a top command of Nazi leaders, using faithful underlings such as Eichmann, nor only by the bottom dregs of cruel guards, but by a middle layer too.

In the transportation, selection, manufacturing of death gases, gassing, shooting, torturing, and disposal of innocent men, women, and children, gathered from every corner of Europe, many ordinary people were involved not only in the dirty but in the routine "clean" work. The professions of those on trial include dentists (useful for extracting and smelting of gold teeth), pharmacists, accountants, teachers.

The story unfolding here is not of the banality of evil but of involvement in evil. It is a lesson worth all the restoked sorrow of the trial, for the world and especially for the German people: the young to learn and the old to remember.

JESUIT EDITOR PREDICTS CATHOLIC-JEWISH ACCORD

The Rev. Ronald R. Campion, associate editor of America, the Jesuit magazine, has predicted in an article in a Jewish magazine that the next session of the Vatican Council will ratify statements on Catholic-Jewish relations and on religious liberty, says the New York Times. Writing in The Jewish World, a new illustrated monthly, Father Campion recalled his discussions with Catholic leaders at the last session of the Ecumenical Council, and said:

"I can affirm that a Catholic consensus on both topics has in fact already been established. But in a living organism of the dimension of the Roman Catholic Church it takes time for such a consensus to come to mature comprehension throughout the entire membership."

Asserting that he had "every confidence" that the Vatican Council would ratify the statements on Catholic-Jewish relations and on religious liberty, he added:

"When this happens we will witness the realization of ardent desires long entertained by men of goodwill everywhere, not least of all, by Pope John XXIII and his successor, Pope Paul VI."

GOLDMANN SEES SIGNS OF CHANGE TOWARD JEWS IN SOVIET

Taking a conciliatory tone toward Soviet treatment of Russian Jews, Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, said in Paris that there are hopeful signs of change there. In a speech to a WJC press luncheon there, he said the Soviet Union has slightly eased its ban on the emigration of any but aged Jews.

He listed the familiar complaints of discrimination against Judaism in Russia, says the New York Herald Tribune. But, he added, "I have the feeling that some of the Soviet leaders are beginning to feel that there is a problem." He said he would like to go to Moscow to discuss it with officials.

Dr. Goldmann said he recently told a Soviet diplomat that Premier Khrushchev should be informed that the WJC only wants to see Russian Jews treated as well as Jews in the Eastern European satellites.

Dr. Goldmann does not consider Soviet classification of Judaism as a nationality stamped on internal passports a form of discrimination, he said. On the contrary, it gives Jews a sense of identity.

Dr. Goldmann also called for the neutralization of the Middle East with an East-West guaranty that the status quo will not be changed by force.

CANADA: ALLY FOR PEACE

Speech of Marvin Gelber, of Toronto, Member for South York, delivered in the House of Commons of Canada

Mr. Chairman, there was an ancient Greek philosopher called Heraclitus who said you cannot stand in the same stream twice; everything is in flux; everything is in change. I believe we should take a look at our attitude toward NATO, the commonwealth, the United Nations, and at our associations with Britain and the United States, which are always in a state of change...

Today our relationship with Britain has matured, but our association with the United States is under critical review. The emergence of our southern neighbour as the political leader of the free world, and the most powerful of all the world's economies, has placed special stresses on our thinking, for we have profited much in terms of our security and economic growth by the easy relationship which ensued between us for more than a century.

It is important to separate in our minds the problems which are disturbing us. The role of the United States as leader of the western alliance should not be confused with the question of United States capital investment in Canadian development. We can only welcome the profitable participation of friends in our economic growth. Our ability to provide solutions that meet our national needs and prove attractive to foreign investors is our task, not theirs.

Trade problems also influence our relationship with the United States. Here there is a closer association between political and economic policy, and the United States must follow policies of trade which will give strength to her leadership and not frustrate it.

The pull of the frontier endowed American life with a spirit of optimism and a faith in the invincibility of American power. Much of this democracy has given a special and attractive quality to American society. It has also had its shortcomings, and among these have been the inward-looking tendency of American public life, its messianism, its boundless optimism, its refusal to plan because the realization of the American dream was inevitable in any case.

The role of the United States as a world leader was thrust upon her. There was to be a rude awakening. Today we still live with the shock of Pearl Harbor. The United States has learned that it must play a large role and that the price of leadership is not always sweet. The American public has learned that to meet the challenges of the 1960's it does not possess resources without limit. The United States also needs allies, and it prizes them.

The death of John Kennedy removed a powerful leader who was not the product of a disenchantment with the American tradition, but the eloquent spokesman of a new and mature pragmatism that has been willing to accept the burdens of its role and looks to its allies to accept theirs. It would be unworthy for Canadians to be anti-American as it has been unworthy for Canadians to be anti-British or anti-French.

The passions that were expressed about Britain between the two wars have subsided not only because Britain is different, but because we too have changed. But the lesson remains. As a member of a wider alliance we must press for what we think is right, while remaining loyal to our allies and associates.

John Kennedy was not a typical American in a society where the collective pressures to conform are so powerful. His love of learning for the sake of learning marked him as someone special. His refusal to bow to the orgy of sentimentalism that on occasion engulfs his people marked him as a strong individualist.

His personal dignity and that of his wife have shown them as chief citizens who eschewed the popular humdrum. His belief in the equality of man before the law, as expressed by the highest tribunal in his land, will remain his finest hour as it is the blessing of the American commonwealth.

To play our part we must strengthen our own national life for the benefit of all Canadians. The economic growth of our country provides us the sinews for international policy. We must be wise, and we must have the wherewithal to underwrite our judgment.

We must have amity. In our broad country there is scope for all who live here. If we are to be torn by a struggle between our two chief cultural groups, then we will have less to say, we will have less for each to do.

A frantic dialogue can enervate our national being and frustrate the well-intentioned purposes of all. Abroad, we could only sink in the scale of those who are contributing to peace and well-being.

The first test of our statesmanship is leadership at home. This means both national and provincial and in the area of all those voluntary groups which contribute so much to our national life.

In working for a world at peace we seek the extension of the rule of law. We were among the founding members of the United Nations and have joined each of its specialized agencies. Through the developing commonwealth and in association with our NATO allies we are daily seeking to strengthen the forces of peace and to make more abundant the avenues of international well-being.

Canadians must be prepared to share office with more members in the committees of the United Nations and in its secretariat. Canada's influence now more especially will be related to the wisdom of its counsel and the strength of its national life at home.

The shifting emphases in NATO reflect in part the recovery of Europe itself, which NATO was formed to protect. The underpinning of European peace was recognized as the special interest of all the partners, and the English speaking members made commitments stronger, more pervasive and automatic than ever before, which marked a turning point in the history of the west.

To resist the encroachments of Soviet power was sworn on the headstone of Czech democracy.

The discomfitures in NATO arise not alone from jealousies over sovereign power, but the very sinews of national being are at stake in the problems of industrial production, of markets and the race for nuclear technology. These problems of Europe and the Atlantic community pose difficult challenges to American leadership of the west, to the European members themselves, and to countries like Canada which have an important interest and must have an opinion about these serious issues.

We all welcome the moves which the government has made to increase Canadian participation in programs of aid to under-developed countries. This was first marked by doubling the allotment to the special United Nations fund. In his recent statement the Secretary of State for External Affairs outlined government policy for an additional $70 million in the fiscal year 1964-65.

These programs which assist the developing countries to help themselves are a growing aspect of our foreign policy. Foreign aid will remain a facet of our public life during the lifetime of all members of this house, and beyond. We must cast it in these terms, and international assistance will grow as an aspect of our national policy.

It seems to me that we should continue to support all those multi-lateral programs which have grown under the segis of the United Nations and have to their credit many brilliant accomplishments. The devotion and service of peoples from diverse backgrounds who have contributed in a spirit of dedication places us in their debt. Among these are many splendid Canadians.

While we view foreign aid as a permanent feature of our public life, we must plan our programs in terms of our over-all economic policies. Here is the union of the right and of national interest, and we must be ashamed of neither. Foreign aid, like all economic programs, must be viewed as part of our own economic growth and part of the important objective of full employment for Canadians.

To further these aims and to give greater weight to foreign assistance programs, it seems to me that we are going to have to expand our bilateral programs. These provide the more likely avenues for a wide expansion of this special international activity.

There is another facet which we must not neglect. I mentioned the Canadians who have given service abroad. In most of the developing countries there is a lack of knowhow. The skills we have, we can share. The programs of investing in the skills of our people should be related to needs both at home and abroad.

Many Europeans have given this service when the flags of their motherlands flew over the lands of colonial peoples often rich in great traditions but poor in the techniques needed to help themselves. Canada should provide career opportunities for those who wish to serve abroad.

It was suggested by the former secretary general of the United Nations, the late Dag Hammarskjold, that the United Nations itself should create such an international agency through which people of skill could be seconded to developing countries seeking to borrow special talents. The agency could provide the security and the career opportunities which a recipient country is unable to offer.

Canada itself could start such a program through a special section of the civil service. Men and women specially recruited and trained could thus bring their talents to the international scene where such avenues are now provided in modest measure.

In a world of turmoil we are jealous of fundamental rights and liberties of all human beings. The United Nations, through its commission on human rights, has provided an important means for the discussion of these important issues.

The position of Jewish people in the Soviet union is a case in point. This is one aspect of Stalin's policy which Khrushchev has not neglected, although the means are different. The Soviet union is based on the legal recognition of nationalities and, within the context of this law, Jews are designated as a nationality.

Jews constitute slightly more than one per cent of the Soviet population and are eleventh among the nationalities. Thirty-eight per cent live in the Russian republic, 37 per cent in the Ukraine, and seven per cent in white Russia. In a country where they have resided for over a thousand years they are looked upon as an alien group. Policy toward the Jews and Judaism has remained the same since 1948.

The Communist poet Yevtushenko asked why there was no monument to the thousands of Jews slaughtered by the Nazis outside Kiev, at Babi Yar. There is a strong tradition of anti-Semitism in Russia, in which the Soviet leaders have been raised. But there have also been other voices.

No Hebrew bible has been published since 1917. Not a single Jewish religious book has appeared since 1920. Synagogues have been closed; the study of Hebrew forbidden; Jewish religious observances hounded and harried. This process has been stepped up since the middle of 1961. The public baking of matzohs — unleavened bread — for the Passover has been forbidden since the spring of 1962.

Attacks on Jews and Judaism have been published in the Communist press. Elderly religious Jews have their names listed in the press, together with the names of their children, stating public positions and places of work. This is to hold them up to ridicule and is effective social blackmail.

The economic crimes which have led to public trials are almost unbelievable, and death has been the frequent verdict. That within the context of a Communist society another economy exists is like Alice in Wonderland.

This is not even state capitalism. Karl Marx said in his attack on the rise of capitalism in England that when they stopped burning witches they started hanging men for stealing horses. The progress from Stalin to Khrushchev may be mirrored here.

Edward Crankshaw, of the London Observer, as printed in the Globe and Mail of Saturday, November 16, reports a trial where the accused "contrived to perfect a racket which diverted a great deal of the products of no less than 52 state-owned factories and a number of collective farms into their own pockets".

One "had bribed his way into a political post which put him in charge of a 'psycho-neurological health centre' where a large number of patients were innocently engaged in occupational therapy. By bribery and blackmail on a majestic scale, he and another "turned this modest outfit into a highly commercial underwear factory, fitting it out with the latest machines embezzled from state-owned enterprises, diverting wool — 460 tons in all — from collective farms, sending out the manufactured articles to be finished at other state-owned factories, and privately selling the final products in markets and at railway stations".

Of course the accused were trapped because an accomplice, who sold his wife to one of the plotters, confessed to the police, who found under the floor boards of their house rubles valued at $300,000, and bullion in gold bars. The picture was perfect. The Soviet union confesses that within a Communist society exists a highly organized economy of the demi-monde, equipped with everything, even gold bars.

The Soviet union is loth to have meetings of the United Nations commission on human rights. Canada must be one of the guardians of this tribune of fundamental freedoms and ensure that it is not put aside.

The influence of Canada abroad can only be impaired by bitter struggles at home. Sparsely spread along the southern frontier of our great continental land mass, we have only emerged as a country of significance and a people of achievement because for two centuries we have lived and worked together on a basis of give and take. That tolerance is the mortar of our edifice. Should it not withstand the weathering of time, then surely what we have built will crumble.

To be a Canadian is to be proud of our achievement. Should we lose the sense of the worthwhileness of what we are doing we will never respect ourselves nor command the loyalty and allegiance of others with whom we are associated in the great tasks of building peace and well-being. We must stand for understanding both at home and abroad, and this we share with our friends and allies.

The eternal flame which was lit over the grave of Jack Kennedy in Arlington Park will pierce the darkness where prejudice abounds and provide a beacon to men who dream and struggle for freedom. This is something for us all.
